DE Club Wins 3 Firsts Out of 4

The Appomattox Distributive Education Club attended the DE District Convention on Wednesday, February 27, at E. C. Glass High School in Lynchburg.

Mr. Winston Milam, Dean of Boys, E. C. Glass High School, welcomed the students and he felt very close to the DE program because he was at one time a DO Coordinator. Joe Fuller, of the Appomattox Club gave an excellent response to the welcome. Joe presented his response with the Jamestown Festival in mind and pointed out what Lynchburg had contributed to the historic and economic growth of Virginia.

One of the highlights of the meeting was the announcing, by Mr. W. J. Nicholas, Executive Secretary of Lynchburg Retail Merchants Association, of the contests winners. There were four contests held: (1) window display judging; (2) job application and interview; (3) sales demonstration judging; and (4) merchandise presentation. These contests are the outgrowth of what the students have been studying in the classroom.

John Paulette won first place in the window display judging contest. The students judged a window of J. C. Penney which was decorated by professionals. Professional judges also judged the window and the student whose score was nearest that of the judges was declared the winner. In the classroom the students had studied the principles of display, such as color, design, emphasis and balance.

John Ivey Holland won the merchandise presentation contest. The students have studied a unit on merchandise information. The objective of the merchandise information unit is for the students to learn how to collect information about any type of merchandise and how to use merchandise information facts to contribute to better selling and greater satisfaction to the customer. John Ivey gave his presentation on the Duo-Matic storm window.

Jean Arrington won first place in the sales demonstration judging contest. The sales demonstration was put on by professionals and they purposely did not give a perfect demonstration because they wanted the students to catch mistakes. In the classroom the DE students have studied the proper procedure in making a sale such as, approach, showing merchandise effectively, expanding the selling points, overcoming objections, and closing the sale. They have also studied how to suggest additional merchandise.

Mrs. Joan Smith, Coordinator, also attended the meeting and was in charge of the sales demonstration judging contest.

Mr. Ivey Holland also attended, and the Appomattox Club members were glad to see someone from the home-town present. They are also appreciative that he took time from his busy schedule to attend.

Jean, John Thomas and John Ivey will represent the district in contests to be held at the DE state convention on March 25 and 26 in Richmond.

LAWFUL OWNERSHIP OF WILDLIFE CLARIFIED

According to I. T. Quinn, executive director of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, for many years after Virginia became a state the title to wildlife was in the name of the landowner on whose property such wildlife was found. The General Assembly of 1930 was convinced by the State Game Commission that our system of game ownership, comparable to that prevailing in England under a monarchy, was incompatible in a democratic form of government. Before long, should such a system continue to prevail, the state of Virginia would be without any useful forms of wildlife. The result was that the General Assembly in 1930 enacted into law, on approval of the Governor, a statute by which the Commonwealth of Virginia took title to "all wild birds, animals, and fish" for the benefit of all the people of the state. Since that time only the General Assembly, under the Constitution, and the Game Commission, by authority of the legislature, have sole and exclusive authority to enact laws and regulations providing the means, time, manner and extent to which any given species of wildlife may be taken and possessed.

About The Home

By Frances Dell

Let the decorating and furnishing of your home reflect your own personality. The main factor to consider is you — your personality, your needs and your means. If you give thought to your decoration and furnishing it will add greatly to your pleasure and comfort.

Color is probably the most important decorative element. Colors referred to as "warm" are those containing red, yellow, and orange. Decorators say that the "warm" colors tend to stimulate a feeling of intimacy. But when overused, they may make you restless. These colors move toward you and make your rooms seem smaller.

The cool colors are blue, green, violet and others predominated by blue. These cool colors give a feeling of serenity to a room.

If over-used, they can be depressing. Cool colors seem to move away from you, creating a feeling of spaciousness.

Furniture is important. For some people it is hard to decide between conventional and modern. If you have one type and want another but can't afford a complete conversion, keep in mind that beautiful results are achieved with combinations.

In most cases, one style should predominate with the other used more-or-less for accent. Every object in a room should serve some purpose and have a function. Added beauty is always a legitimate function.

Light and the way it is handled can make or break a room. You can accomplish some remarkable results with lighting and the costs need not be unreasonable.

When a man begins to think seriously of saving for a rainy day, it's probably a rainy day. —Franklin P. Jones.

FIREARM LEGISLATION IS THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S BUSINESS

From time to time, county governing bodies have sent to the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries resolutions requesting the Commission to enact regulations prohibiting the use of certain kinds of firearms, usually high-powered rifles, according to Mrs. Evelyn P. Rueger, secretary of the Commission and assistant executive director. Mrs. Rueger points out that a regulation of this nature is beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission since the enactment of such legislation is for safety purposes. "It is a matter, therefore, that should have the attention of the General Assembly and not the Game Commission," Mrs. Rueger said.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

Democracy in action is proving useful as a new weapon against mental illness in 30 Veterans Administration hospitals.

Dr. S. T. Ginsberg, chief of the psychiatry division at VA central office in Washington, D. C., said patient representatives elected and organized under democratic principles give patients a voice in the management of their affairs at the hospitals.

VA psychiatrists have found this "patient government" useful in the treatment of mental illness because of the self-development, the co-operation, and the acceptance of responsibility it fosters, Dr. Ginsberg said.

Dr. Ginaberg said patient-governments are mainly of two types:

1. Patients on a ward elect several of their members as a council to represent the ward in joint meetings with members of the hospital staff.

2. Patients organize as an overall group along the lines of a community citizens' association, with a constitution and by-laws and periodic meetings presided over by elected officers.

These patient -governments operate in planning recreation for patients, establishing ward regulations for patients' conduct, assigning housekeeping duties, recommending disciplinary measures, welcoming new patients and many other activities, Dr. Ginsberg said.
